

These Are the Nominees for the 2017 Marcel Duchamp Prize

Women artists dominate this year's shortlist.

Maja Bajevic, exhibition view at Michel Rein, Paris, 2014. Courtesy Michel Rein, Paris.

The artists Maja Bajevic, Joana Hadjithomas and Khalil Joreige, Charlotte Moth, and Vittorio Santoro are the nominees for the 2017 Prix Marcel Duchamp, France's most important contemporary art prize.

The nominees were announced on February 2 by the selection committee of the French art prize—formed by 11 collectors from the Association for the International Diffusion of French Art (ADIAF)—during an event held at the auction house Artcurial, in Paris.

The work of the nominees will be seen as part of a group show at the Centre Pompidou opening on October 4, 2017.

Maja Bajevic was born in 1967 in Sarajevo and lives and works in Paris. Her work explores events in recent history—including the questions of collective identity, ideology, and sociology—through sculpture, installation, video and sound. She is represented by Galerie Michel Rein, Paris and Brussels; and Peter Kilchmann, Zurich.